Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from McGill University: Papers From the Department of Applied Science Gentlemen, - In undertaking to give an address as president of Section III. I am conscious of attempting a task of great difficulty, for few men, in these days of specialists, can claim adequately and fairly to represent the claims of pure mathematics, chemistry, astronomy and physics in general. The only plan seems to be for each to speak for his own department, trusting that in this manner the work of the section will be covered in the course of three or four years. I have, therefore, thought it best to call your attention chiefly to the latest phase of engineering, namely, that of an experimental science, and especially to the close connection between actual practice and experiment, and the progress of invention, as illustrated by the modern history of engineering. You will, I doubt not, pardon me if I refer somewhat freely to the work now being carried on in the laboratories of McGill University, as, though fully conscious that this is but one of the busy workshops of the world, I am naturally most conversant with its details. Some one has said that the birthday of modern engineering was the day when Watt announced his new discovery of the power of steam. It is, however, hardly fair to call it the birthday, it is more like the return of Rip Van Winkle. The science which built the pyramids, with their wonderful exactness of measurement; which planned the sculptured avenue for the rays of the midsummer sun; which constructed pools in Gihon and hanging gardens in Babylon; which warmed the houses of Pompeii and ventilated...
