Excerpt: .and of putting it down neatly forms a fine psychological groundwork for the perpetual remembrance of the same. I consider that the teacher who uses printed blank forms for his students reports has thrown away his very best tool. Moreover the writing of reports has in itself a good educational value, as has already been argued. Though we hate to waste our precious laboratory time on clerical work, yet for the majority of men who take our course this neat and systematic clerical work may be its most valuable lesson. For all these reasons we necessarily require that a separate and complete report be handed in by each student. I permit and request the students to make their reports as brief as possible, without leaving out any essential data. The nature of the reports may be seen from the following. General Instructions for Reports....
