In this, as in other things, men are influenced by the prevailing fashion. You all know how fashion influences the mind with respect to wearing apparel. There is Miss Love;!ress; and she encases herself in an endless amount of crinoline; and promenades the street like a locomotive Arah tent; just because that is the fashion. Then, there is Mr. Buckram; a very common character; who, every morning, fastens round his wrists a pair of starched handcuffs, and buttons round his neck an unhending collar, which threatens to cut off his newly fledged whiskers; all, because that is the common fashion; and he does not like to be singular. On precisely the same principle do we find that if the stature of a man happen to be some nine or fifteen inches, above a medium height, people are led to regard him, as a human curiosity; while, On the other hand, if his measurement exhibit him the same number of inches below the medium height, we are prone to look down upon his pelU form as though it were some human inferiority. There is often an inconvenience attending nonconformity to the common standard And, besides this, it not infrequently subjects a man to the innoyance of rude anfl biting satire. Just as if a man could help the length of his legs, the height to which nature has carried his head, or the breadth and thickness of the midland portion of...
